The near-perfect conditions supporting most asset classes in 2017 will be hard to repeat. With volatility low, risk premiums tight, and interest rates still at or near cycle lows, how should insurance companies be balancing risk versus return? What will be the best sources of durable alpha in 2018 and where may there be hidden risks?
Speaker:
Jeff Jacobs, Global CIO, Financial Institutions Group, BlackRock
- 9:55–10:10 AM REFRESHMENT BREAK
- 10:10–11:00 AM Emerging Product Trends
Product designs and distribution strategies are evolving rapidly in the insurance industry, driven by regulatory changes as well market conditions, with interest rates rising and heightened concerns about equity market valuations. Notwithstanding uncertainty around the fiduciary rule, fee-based products are coming to the fore, as are many new or evolutionary product structures, such as FIAs based on volatility or risk control indexes, VA+DIA designs, and “buffer” annuities. Demand for new ideas and innovation is likely to continue to grow, on expectations of sales growth driven by the demographics of an aging population. This session will look at emerging product trends and implications from a product design and risk management standpoint.

Trends Transforming Tomorrow
 As a futurist, Jack Uldrich is frequently asked, "What will the future look like?" And his response is: "Predictably unpredictable." So, how does a person prepare for such a paradoxical future? The answer lies in embracing other paradoxes such as learning to unlearn, thinking about the unthinkable, embracing failure as a key component of success, and acknowledging that an awareness of one's ignorance is a key component of wisdom. Uldrich's presentations provide scenarios that spell out what the world may look like in just a few short years and provide an in-depth exploration of how the "Internet of Things" and robotics, gaming dynamics and artificial intelligence will change everyday life for all of us by the beginning of the next decade.
